Gotham Market at The Ashland had to respect the cultural and historic neighborhood in which it resides and to harmonize eight distinct venues in one coherent space. Though it's a new space, the design team wanted it to feel like it had always been there. A mix of exposed industrial materials and sophisticated touches impressed the judges. "They did a good job of using bold statement pieces" like the black steel pipe chandeliers that feature 180 hand-blown glass globes. "There are distinguishable elements to each place, but the space is still cohesive," the judges said.
